The Digital Research Space

Nora McGregor, Digital Curator
British Library
@ndalyrose

26 September 2012
150 million items from the first written version of Alice’s Adventures in Wonderland to the latest UK blogs.
State of the art anoxic (low oxygen) environment and robots help preserve the nation’s memory
“...Reading individual works is as irrelevant as describing the architecture of a building from a single brick, or the layout of a city from a single church”
Today’s digital researcher uses new technology to mash-up, mark-up, deconstruct, share, visualise, analyse and place materials in new contexts and views.
Leveraging social media and the crowd to help georeference 725 Maps from the collection
Thank You!

Nora McGregor, Digital Curator
British Library
@ndalyrose

26 September 2012